

C O N T E N T S

OF THE

N I N T H V O L U M E N. Y O R K.

TESTIMONIES OF ANCIENT HEATHENS.

| CHAP.  |                                                                                              | A. D. | PAGE. |
|--------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------|-------|
| LIII.  | EUNAPIUS - - - - -                                                                           | 396   | I     |
| LIV.   | CLAUDIAN - - - - -                                                                           | 396   | 15    |
| LV.    | MACROBIUS - - - - -                                                                          | 400   | 22    |
| LVI.   | RUTILIUS - - - - -                                                                           | 418   | 26    |
| LVII.  | OLYMPIODORUS - - - - -                                                                       | 425   | 28    |
| LVIII. | ZOSIMUS - - - - -                                                                            | 425   | 31    |
| LIX.   | HIEROCLES OF ALEXANDRIA - - - - -                                                            | 450   | 64    |
| LX.    | PROCLUS - - - - -                                                                            | 464   | 67    |
| LXI.   | MARINUS - - - - -                                                                            | 485   | 69    |
| LXII.  | DAMASCIUS - - - - -                                                                          | 540   | 74    |
| LXIII. | SIMPLICIUS - - - - -                                                                         | 550   | 84    |
| LXIV.  | A REVIEW OF THE JEWISH AND HEATHEN TESTIMONIES IN THE SEVERAL VOLUMES OF THIS WORK - - - - - | ...   | 89    |

The State of Gentilism under Christian Emperors.

| SECT. |                                                                                                                                                                |     |
|-------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1     | Imperial laws concerning Gentile people and their worship -                                                                                                    | 98  |
| 2     | A Consultation and Divination of heathen people in the time of Valens, about the year 373 -                                                                    | 116 |
| 3     | The Petition of the Roman senate to Valentinian the younger in the year 384, that the Altar of Victory, which had been removed by Gratian, might be restored - | 132 |
| 4     | The Correspondence between Maximus of Madaura and Augustine in the year 390 -                                                                                  | 154 |

C O N T E N T S.

| Sect. |                                                                                                                                          | Page. |
|-------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------|
| 14    | This variety of opinion is no just objection against the truth of the Christian religion - - - - -                                       | 260   |
| 15    | Curiosity and inquisitiveness of mind were dispositions frequently indulged by Heretics - - - - -                                        | 263   |
| 16    | Heretics were not in general solicitous about little matters, and were moderate towards those who differed from them - - - - -           | 265   |
| 17    | Pernicious consequences supposed to arise from some of their doctrines, were charged upon them, though they did not admit them - - - - - | 266   |
| 18    | The seeds of these Heresies were sown in the days of the apostles - - - - -                                                              | 267   |

BOOK THE SECOND.

The History of particular Heretics.

CHAPTER I.

OF SATURNINUS.

|   |                                                                        |     |
|---|------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1 | Of his opinions, as given us by Irenæus - - - - -                      | 269 |
| 2 | He was an obscure person, and had probably but few followers - - - - - | 270 |

CHAPTER II.

OF BASILIDES.

|    |                                                                                                                                             |     |
|----|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1  | Of his time - - - - -                                                                                                                       | 271 |
| 2  | The account of him, as given by Irenæus and other ancient authors - - - - -                                                                 | 272 |
| 3  | An examination of several of the opinions attributed to him - - - - -                                                                       | 274 |
| 4  | Concerning his notion of 365 heavens - - - - -                                                                                              | 275 |
| 5  | He believed the world was made by angels, the chief of whom presided over the Jews - - - - -                                                | 276 |
| 6  | His opinion concerning the person of Christ - - - - -                                                                                       | 277 |
| 7  | Of the story of Simon the Cyrenian, and whether he believed that Christ suffered - - - - -                                                  | 278 |
| 8  | Beausobre's view of the sentiments of Basilides concerning Christ - - - - -                                                                 | 280 |
| 9  | He believed the baptism of Jesus - - - - -                                                                                                  | 281 |
| 10 | He is said to have partaken of things offered to idols, and to have denied the necessity or reasonableness of suffering martyrdom - - - - - | 282 |
| 11 | He believed that the soul only would be saved - - - - -                                                                                     | 283 |
| 12 | He is falsely accused of believing that actions are indifferent in their own nature - - - - -                                               | ib. |
| 13 | A probable account of the foundation of this charge - - - - -                                                                               | 286 |
| 14 | He is also accused of using magic and incantations - - - - -                                                                                | 287 |
| 15 | Of the meaning of Caulacau, and his definition of faith and hope - - - - -                                                                  | 289 |

| Self.                                                                                                                           | Page. |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------|
| 5 The demolition of the temple of Serapis at Alexandria, and other temples in Egypt, and some other temples elsewhere, in the year 391 | 158          |
| 6 A pretended Heathen Oracle in the year 398, foretelling the period of the Christian religion                                         | 171          |
| 7 The demolition of the temple of the goddess Cœlestis at Carthage, in the year 399                                                    | 172          |
| 8 An image of Hercules destroyed by the Christians at Suffecta, in Africa, in the year 399                                             | 174          |
| 9 A disturbance at Calama in Numidia in the year 408                                                                                   | 175          |
| 10 The overthrow of Rhadagais the Goth in the year 405                                                                                 | 177          |
| 11 Rome besieged, taken, and sacked by Alaric the Goth, in the year 410                                                                | 180          |
| 12 The Correspondence between Augustine and Volusian in the year 412                                                                   | 183          |
| 13 The Correspondence between the people of Madaura and Augustine; time uncertain                                                      | 195          |
| 14 The Correspondence between Augustine and Longinian; time uncertain                                                                  | 199          |
| 15 Observations of Orosius and Augustine upon the treatment given to the Gentiles by Christian magistrates                             | 201          |
| 16 Concluding observations upon the state of Gentilism under Christian emperors                                                        | 203          |

HISTORY OF HERETICS.

BOOK THE FIRST.

General Observations concerning Heretics.

|                                                                                                                                                                 |     |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1 THE meaning of the word Heresy                                                                                                                                | 223 |
| 2 It is difficult to define what is Heresy, or who is an Heretic                                                                                                | 226 |
| 3 Of the causes of Heresies                                                                                                                                     | 228 |
| 4 Many mistakes in the writings of those who have published the history of Heresies accounted for                                                               | 230 |
| 5 The number of Heresies hath been augmented without sufficient reason                                                                                          | 231 |
| 6 Most Heresies of the two first centuries may be reduced to two kinds                                                                                          | 233 |
| 7 Heretics have been often treated with great acrimony                                                                                                          | 235 |
| 8 Heretics have been greatly calumniated                                                                                                                        | 237 |
| 9 The ancient Heretics believed the Unity of God                                                                                                                | 247 |
| 10 They made great use of the scriptures                                                                                                                        | 250 |
| 11 Some of them also used apocryphal books                                                                                                                      | 254 |
| 12 They respected the apostles and apostolic traditions                                                                                                         | 256 |
| 13 The ancient Heresiarchs were generally men of letters, and are said to have borrowed most of their peculiar notions from some of the schools of philosophers | 258 |

| Sett. |                                                                                                                                                                                    | Page. |
|--------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------|
| 16           | Of the name Abraxas, which he is said to have given to the prince of the heavens - - -                                                                                             | 290          |
| 17           | Of the number, costliness, and heathenish origin of those gems called Abraxæi - - -                                                                                                | ib.          |
| 18           | Of the derivation and meaning of the word Abraxas, and to what the Basilidians applied it - - -                                                                                    | 291          |
| 19           | It probably referred to their philosophical Arcana - - -                                                                                                                           | 292          |
| 20           | The gems called Abraxæi were used by the heathens as charms - - -                                                                                                                  | 294          |
| 21           | The Christians accused by Adrian of worshipping Serapis - - -                                                                                                                      | ib.          |
| 22           | An examination of Montfaucon's figures - - -                                                                                                                                       | 295          |
| 23           | These gems were undoubtedly of heathenish origin - - -                                                                                                                             | 300          |
| 24           | From hence came the superstitious custom of writing Abrafadabra as a charm - - -                                                                                                   | ib.          |
| 25           | Beaufobre's observations on Chiffet, and arguments against these gems being Christian; first, from the incredibility of the thing; secondly, from the silence of the fathers - - - | 301          |
| 26           | Farther observations on Chiffet - - -                                                                                                                                              | 303          |
| 27           | Of the names of angels found on those gems - - -                                                                                                                                   | ib.          |
| 28           | Conclusions drawn from the foregoing observations - - -                                                                                                                            | 304          |
| 29           | Of the scriptures received by Basilides - - -                                                                                                                                      | ib.          |
|              | § 1 He did not pay great regard to the Old Testament - - -                                                                                                                         | ib.          |
|              | § 2 He received the whole, or at least the greater part of the New - - -                                                                                                           | 305          |
| 30           | Of the gospel of Basilides - - -                                                                                                                                                   | 306          |
| 31           | Of the prophets Barcabbas and Barcoph - - -                                                                                                                                        | 307          |
| 32           | Of the odes of Basilides - - -                                                                                                                                                     | ib.          |
| 33           | These things prove the authenticity and wide-spread of the scriptures of the New Testament - - -                                                                                   | ib.          |

CHAPTER III.

OF CARPOCRATES AND HIS FOLLOWERS.

|    |                                                                                                        |     |
|----|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1  | Some account of Carpoocrates and Epiphanes, from Clement of Alexandria and other ancient authors - - - | 308 |
| 2  | Of the time in which Carpoocrates lived - - -                                                          | 309 |
| 3  | Of the principles of the Carpocratians concerning the creation - - -                                   | 310 |
| 4  | Of their opinion concerning the person of Jesus Christ - - -                                           | ib. |
| 5  | They are accused of saying that some may excel Jesus - - -                                             | 311 |
| 6  | And are said to have used magical arts - - -                                                           | 312 |
| 7  | Of marking their disciples and incensing the pictures of Christ and others - - -                       | ib. |
| 8  | A general view of what they believed - - -                                                             | 313 |
| 9  | They are accused of asserting that there is no difference in the nature of things - - -                | 314 |
| 10 | And of practising the grossest impurities in their assemblies - - -                                    | 315 |
| 11 | The utter improbability of these accusations shewn from a variety of considerations - - -              | 316 |
| 12 | What scriptures they received - - -                                                                    | 318 |

CHAPTER IV.

OF CERINTHUS.

| Sec. |                                                         | Page. |
|-------------|---------------------------------------------------------|--------------|
| 1           | Ancient authors who speak of Cerinthus                  |              |
| § 1         | Irenæus - - - - -                                       | 319          |
| § 2         | Epiphanius - - - - -                                    | 321          |
| § 3         | Theodoret - - - - -                                     | 322          |
| 2           | Observations relating to the time of Cerinthus          | 323          |
| 3           | Observations tending to illustrate his history          | 324          |
| 4           | Of his principles and sentiments - - - - -              | 325          |
| § 1         | He is reckoned by some a Gnostic - - - - -              | ib.          |
| § 2         | He however taught one supreme God - - - - -             | ib.          |
| § 3         | What he thought of the person of Jesus Christ - - - - - | ib.          |
| § 4         | And of the Holy Ghost - - - - -                         | 326          |
| § 5         | And of the Resurrection - - - - -                       | 327          |
| § 6         | He was zealous for the Mosaic law - - - - -             | ib.          |
| § 7         | And was a Millenarian - - - - -                         | ib.          |
| 5           | Of his morals - - - - -                                 | 328          |
| 6           | An account of what scriptures he received - - - - -     | ib.          |

CHAPTER V.

OF PRODICUS AND HIS FOLLOWERS.

|   |                                                                                                                                              |     |
|---|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1 | Of the account of him from Clemens Alexandrinus - - - - -                                                                                    | 331 |
| 2 | Theodoret's account of him, in which he is far from being exact - - - - -                                                                    | 332 |
| 3 | Observations on Clement, which render it probable that his followers were not such licentious livers as they are said to have been - - - - - | 333 |
| 4 | They are accused of believing the uselessness of prayer - - - - -                                                                            | 334 |
| 5 | From the arguments used against them by Clement, it appears they respected Christ and the scriptures - - - - -                               | 335 |
| 6 | They are accused of denying the necessity of suffering for religion - - - - -                                                                | 336 |
| 7 | Of the time and general character of Prodicus and his followers - - - - -                                                                    | ib. |

CHAPTER VI.

OF THE ADAMIANS, OR ADAMITES.

|   |                                                                                                                      |     |
|---|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1 | The account of these people from Epiphanius and Austin - - - - -                                                     | 337 |
| 2 | Considerations tending to prove there never were such heretics - - - - -                                             | 338 |
| 3 | An objection taken from the practice of the Gnostics, and answers - - - - -                                          | 339 |
| 4 | An objection taken from Theodoret's assertion, that Prodicus instituted the sect of the Adamites, answered - - - - - | ib. |

CHAPTER VII.

OF MARC AND HIS FOLLOWERS, CALLED MARCOSIANS.

| Sec. |                                                                                        | Page. |
|-------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------|
| 1           | Of his time, his country, and the sect from which he sprang                            | 340          |
| 2           | He is accused of being a magician                                                      | 342          |
| 3           | He is said to have had an assisting daemon, and to have used various arts of deceiving | 343          |
| 4           | Some observations upon these accusations                                               | ib.          |
| 5           | The Marcosians are said to have regarded the letters of the alphabet as mysterious     | 344          |
| 6           | They are unjustly accused of holding two principles, and being Docetæ                  | ib.          |
| 7           | They continued in the practice of Baptism and the Eucharist                            | 345          |
| 8           | Of their opinion concerning Jesus Christ                                               | ib.          |
| 9           | Of their rites of redemption, and the meaning of them, as given by Rhenford            | 346          |
| 10          | They believed the facts recorded in the gospels                                        | 347          |
| 11          | They received the scriptures both of the Old and New Testament                         | 348          |
| 12          | A particular enumeration of the books of the New Testament used by them                | ib.          |
| 13          | Of their apocryphal books                                                              | 349          |

CHAPTER VIII.

OF HERACLEON.

|   |                                                                                                           |     |
|---|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1 | Ancient writers who speak of him, and of the time when he lived                                           | 350 |
| 2 | He was a follower of Valentinus, with whose opinions his sentiments nearly corresponded                   | 351 |
| 3 | Commentaries were written by him on several parts of scripture                                            | 352 |
| 4 | Containing remarks on the foregoing passages, particularly concerning what parts of scripture he received | ib. |

CHAPTER IX.

OF CERDON.

|   |                                                                         |     |
|---|-------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1 | Of his time                                                             | 354 |
| 2 | Of his opinions                                                         | 355 |
| 3 | He was an admirer of virginity, and is said to have recanted his errors | 356 |
| 4 | What scriptures were received by him                                    | 357 |

CHAPTER X.

OF MARCION AND HIS FOLLOWERS.

|                                                                                                          | Page. |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------|
| 1 Some general account of him from Irenæus - - -                                                         | 358          |
| 2 Of the time in which he lived - - -                                                                    | 359          |
| 3 The history of him as given by Epiphanius - - -                                                        | 361          |
| 4 The story of his deceiving a young woman doubtful - -                                                  | 362          |
| 5 Several observations tending to shew its incredibility - -                                             | 363          |
| 6 Some reason to suspect it was the invention of Epiphanius -                                            | 365          |
| 7 He began to propagate his errors in his own country, for whichhe was expelled by his father - - -  | 366          |
| 8 His way of life was very unsettled - - -                                                               | ib.          |
| 9 He had a great number of followers - - -                                                               | ib.          |
| 10 Of his opinions, and the number of principles which he held -                                         | 368          |
| 11 His notion of the Creator, and the world formed by him, and theGod superior to him - - -          | 369          |
| 12 The Marcionite idea of the difference between good and just -                                         | 371          |
| 13 The good God was the maker of beings spiritual and invisible -                                        | ib.          |
| 14 The Marcionites erroneous in dividing the Deity - - -                                                 | 373          |
| 15 They were believers in a future judgment, and in the necessity ofhuman actions - - -              | 374          |
| 16 They thought the soul, but not the bodies of the virtuous wouldbe happy in a future state - - -   | 375          |
| 17 The belief of a transmigration ascribed to them by Epiphanius -                                       | 376          |
| 18 Some account of their notion that Christ delivered the wicked butleft the good - - -              | 377          |
| 19 Marcion's opinion of the person of Christ that he was not a realman - - -                         | 378          |
| 20 Tertullian's arguments against this notion - - -                                                      | 380          |
| 21 Marcion believed there were to be two Christs - - -                                                   | 381          |
| 22 He allowed the truth of our Saviour's miracles - - -                                                  | 382          |
| 23 And of his death - - -                                                                                | 383          |
| 24 And resurrection - - -                                                                                | ib.          |
| 25 And of the principal facts related concerning him - - -                                               | 384          |
| 26 The manners of the Marcionites were virtuous, and they had manymartyrs - - -                      | 385          |
| 27 They contemned marriage, and highly extolled virginity - -                                            | 386          |
| 28 They fasted on the Sabbath - - -                                                                      | 388          |
| 29 They celebrated Baptism and the Eucharist, but were somewhatirregular in the administration - - - | ib.          |
| 30 They had churches for stated public worship - - -                                                     | 389          |
| 31 Marcion wholly rejected the Old Testament - - -                                                       | ib.          |
| 32 He also objected to the appointment of sacrifices - - -                                               | 390          |
| 33 He mutilated the New Testament wherever it contained quota-tions from the Old - - -               | 391          |
| 34 He framed antitheses to shew the law to thegospel - - -                                           | 391          |

| Sec. |                                                                                                                  | Page. |
|-------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------|
| 35          | Marcion received but eleven books of the New Testament, and of the gospels only that of Luke, and this mutilated | 393          |
| 36          | He rejected the genealogy and baptism of our Saviour                                                             | 395          |
| 37          | He also rejected the history of the temptation                                                                   | 396          |
| 38          | An account of many other alterations made by him in St. Luke's gospel                                            | ib.          |
| 39          | There were a sufficient number of texts remaining to confute his errors                                          | 402          |
| 40          | The catholic Christians asserted the antiquity of the unmutated gospel                                           | ib.          |
| 41          | Marcion rejected the Acts of the apostles                                                                        | 403          |
| 42          | And received only ten epistles of St. Paul, and most of these altered                                            | 405          |
| 43          | Of the alterations and omissions of Marcion in the epistle to the Galatians                                      | 406          |
| 44          | In the first epistle to the Corinthians                                                                          | 407          |
| 45          | In the second epistle to the Corinthians                                                                         | 408          |
| 46          | In the epistle to the Romans                                                                                     | 409          |
| 47          | In the first epistle to the Thessalonians                                                                        | 410          |
| 48          | In the second epistle to the Thessalonians                                                                       | ib.          |
| 49          | In the epistle to the Ephesians, called by him the epistle to the Laodiceans                                     | 411          |
| 50          | He probably did not much alter the epistle to the Colossians                                                     | 414          |
| 51          | Nor at all that to Philemon                                                                                      | ib.          |
| 52          | Nor but little that to the Philipians                                                                            | ib.          |
| 53          | An argument from hence in favour of the authenticity of the New Testament                                        | 415          |

C H A P T E R XI.

OF LUCIAN, OR LEUCIUS.

|    |                                                                                        |     |
|----|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1  | Some general account of him from ancient authors, with observations thereon            | 415 |
| 2  | Of the time when he lived                                                              | 416 |
| 3  | Of his opinions                                                                        | 417 |
| 4  | Some observations on his notion about the souls of brutes and the resurrection of them | 420 |
| 5  | A belief in another kind of resurrection, ascribed to him by Tertullian                | 421 |
| 6  | Some general account of his writings                                                   | 422 |
| 7  | Some observations on the assertion of Mr. Jones that Leucius was a Manichee            | 423 |
| 8  | Leucius was the author of the History of the Nativity of the Virgin Mary               | 424 |
| 9  | The writer of it not a Jew                                                             | 425 |
| 10 | The Protevangelion, or Gospel of James, was composed by Leucius                        | 427 |
| 11 | A current tradition that Joseph was a widower, and had children by a former wife       | ib. |

| Sec. |                                                                                             | Page. |
|-------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------|
| 12          | Passages in Epiphanius referring to the Gospel of the Nativity and the Protevangelion - - - | 428          |
| 13          | Observations on some of the contents of these two Gospels -                                 | 429          |
| 14          | Leucius is thought to have interpolated the Gospel of the infancy -                         | ib.          |
| 15          | He was the forger of the Gospel of Nicodemus - - -                                          | 430          |
| 16          | Two other Gospels ascribed to Leucius - - -                                                 | 432          |
| 17          | Of the traditions of Matthias. It is rather uncertain what they were - - -                  | 433          |
| 18          | Leucius was the author of the forged Acts, or Journeying of the apostles - - -              | 434          |
| 19          | Some account of the contents of this book - - -                                             | 435          |
| 20          | These forgeries prove the truth of the canonical scriptures -                               | 436          |

C A A P T E R XII.

OF APELLES.

PART I. His History.

|   |                                                       |     |
|---|-------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1 | Of the time when he lived - - -                       | 437 |
| 2 | Of his connection with Philumene - - -                | ib. |
| 3 | No foundation for the story of his incontinence - - - | 438 |
| 4 | Unjustly accused of discouraging inquiry - - -        | 439 |
| 5 | Of his Writings - - -                                 | 440 |
| 6 | His country uncertain - - -                           | 441 |

PART II. His peculiar Principles.

|    |                                                                    |     |
|----|--------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 7  | He believed one first Principle, who formed another inferior deity | 442 |
| 8  | He thought that the difference of sex depended on the soul -       | 443 |
| 9  | He was not a Docete in his opinion concerning the body of Christ   | ib. |
| 10 | He denied the resurrection of the body - - -                       | 445 |

PART III. What scriptures he received.

|    |                                                                                                                     |     |
|----|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 11 | In other matters he generally agreed with Marcion - - -                                                             | 446 |
| 12 | He did not pay any great regard to the Old Testament -                                                              | ib. |
| 13 | His sentiments about the New Testament probably not very different from Marcion's - - -                             | 447 |
| 14 | It is likely he rejected the beginning of St. Matthew's gospel as well as that of St. Luke - - -                    | ib. |
| 15 | He treated the scriptures just as Marcion did, by receiving part, and rejecting what did not suit his purpose - - - | 448 |

CHAPTER XIII.

OF THE SETHIANS.

| Seç. |                                                                                           | Page. |
|-------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------|
| 1           | Some general observations concerning these Heretics, and the Ophites and Cainites - - - - | 449          |
| 2           | Epiphanius's account of the Sethians - - - -                                              | 450          |
| 3           | They called themselves the descendants of Seth - - - -                                    | ib.          |
| 4           | They spoke of Seth in a very honourable manner - - - -                                    | 451          |
| 5           | They ascribed the creation of the world to angels - - - -                                 | ib.          |
| 6           | They believed that Jesus Christ descended from Seth in an extraordinary way - - - -       | ib.          |
| 7           | By Christ who descended upon Jesus they probably meant the Holy Ghost - - - -             | 453          |
| 8           | An account of what books they used - - - -                                                | 454          |
| 9           | What scriptures they received - - - -                                                     | 455          |

CHAPTER XIV.

OF THE CAIANS, OR CAINITES.

|   |                                                                                                                                                         |     |
|---|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1 | Some account of the accusations brought against them, from Epiphanius and Irenæus - - - -                                                               | 456 |
| 2 | Observations tending to shew the incredibility of these accounts - - - -                                                                                | 457 |
| 3 | That the denomination Cainites arose from a way of speaking among the Sethians, rendered probable by passages from scripture and other writings - - - - | 458 |
| 4 | There never was a sect of Christians who called themselves Cainites, or who professed the principles above described - - - -                            | 460 |

CHAPTER XV.

OF THE OPHIANS OR OPHITES.

|   |                                                                                        |     |
|---|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1 | The Ophians are said by Irenæus and Theodoret to be the same with the Sethians - - - - | 460 |
| 2 | Very different representations given of these people by Epiphanius and others - - - -  | 461 |
| 3 | Origen's account of the Ophians - - - -                                                | 462 |

CHAPTER XVI.

OF ARTEMON.

|   |                                                                          |     |
|---|--------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1 | Of his opinions - - - -                                                  | 465 |
| 2 | He founded them on scripture, and paid a regard to its authority - - - - | ib. |
| 3 | Several others held the same opinions - - - -                            | 466 |
| 4 | Of the time when he lived - - - -                                        | ib. |

CHAPTER XVII.

OF THEODOTUS.

| Self. |                                                                                                           | Page. |
|--------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------|
| 1            | Of his time and opinions - - -                                                                            | 467          |
| 2            | Passages from ancient authors concerning him - -                                                          | ib.          |
| 3            | He is accused of denying Christ in a time of persecution -                                                | 468          |
| 4            | Two observations on what Epiphanius says about him -                                                      | 469          |
| 5            | The scriptures of the Old and New Testament were received by him -                                        | ib.          |
| 6            | There were several of the same name in the second century                                                 | 471          |
| 7            | Theodotus the banker, is generally supposed to be the author of thesect of the Melchisedechians - - - | ib.          |

CHAPTER XVIII.

OF HERMOGENES.

|    |                                                                                                                         |     |
|----|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1  | Of his time and country - - -                                                                                           | 473 |
| 2  | What authors say of him, and by whom he is omitted -                                                                    | 474 |
| 3  | Some account of him, and those who wrote against him -                                                                  | ib. |
| 4  | He was skilled in painting, and was originally a Christian -                                                            | 475 |
| 5  | Some account of his opinions concerning the eternity of matter -                                                        | ib. |
| 6  | He believed one supreme God unchangeably good - -                                                                       | 476 |
| 7  | He ascribed to matter an irregular motion, but introduced noæons - - -                                              | 477 |
| 8  | No distinct account of his opinion concerning the person of JesusChrist - - -                                       | 478 |
| 9  | Some other opinions of his about the origin of the soul, humanliberty, the devil, dæmons, and a future judgment - - | ib. |
| 10 | He never set up a separate communion - - -                                                                              | 479 |
| 11 | His testimony to scripture - - -                                                                                        | ib. |
| 12 | He received both the Old and New Testament - - -                                                                        | 480 |
| 13 | No account of any writings of his - - -                                                                                 | 481 |

CHAPTER XIX.

OF THE MONTANISTS.

|   |                                                                                                     |     |
|---|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1 | Ancient writers who speak of the Montanists - - -                                                   | 481 |
| 2 | Of the time when they first sprang up - - -                                                         | 482 |
| 3 | From whence they derived their name, and of the extent and con-tinuance of their opinions - - - | ib. |
| 4 | Where Montanus was born, and of certain reproaches cast on himand his followers - - -           | 483 |

Self.

|                                                                         | Page. |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------|
| 5 Of his companions and assistants, and of their prophecies             | 484          |
| 6 Of his pretensions and manner of prophesying                          | 485          |
| 7 Of the opinions of the Montanists                                     | 487          |
| 8 Of some peculiarities in their manners, discipline, and doctrine      | 488          |
| 9 Of their mysteries, and some calumnies cast upon them on that account | 490          |
| 10 Of their testimony to the scriptures                                 | 492          |

CHAPTER XX.

OF PRAXEAS.

|                                                                                                        |     |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1 Of the time in which he lived                                                                        | 493 |
| 2 What ancient writers speak of him, and by whom he is omitted                                         | ib. |
| 3 Of his country                                                                                       | 494 |
| 4 He suffered in the cause of Christ                                                                   | 495 |
| 5 He was once confuted, and signed a recantation, but afterwards professed again his former principles | ib. |
| 6 A believer in baptism and the general articles of the Christian faith                                | ib. |
| 7 A strenuous assertor of the divine unity                                                             | 496 |
| 8 He would not allow that the father suffered                                                          | 497 |
| 9 He received both the Old and New Testament gospels and epistles                                      | 498 |
| 10 He founded his arguments upon a great variety of passages both in the Old and New Testament         | 499 |

CHAPTER XXI.

OF JULIUS CAESARIANUS.

|                                                                            |     |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1 Of his time                                                              | 501 |
| 2 In his writings he argued from the Old as well as from the New Testament | ib. |
| 3 Of his opinions, country, and philosophical speculations                 | 502 |

CHAPTER XXII.

OF THE ELCESAITES, OR OSSENS.

|                                                                                                                |     |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1 The time uncertain when they first arose                                                                     | 503 |
| 2 They were mentioned and written against by Origen                                                            | ib. |
| 3 Other ancient authors who speak of this sect, and of their opinions                                          | 504 |
| 4 Of the Ossens, who were the same with the Elcesaites, called also Sampseans, and of their time, and opinions | 505 |
| 5 Of the name of the founder of this sect, and of several authors who mention him                              | 509 |
| 6 Of the time when he flourished, according to modern authors                                                  | 510 |

| Self. |                                       |   |   |   | Page. |
|--------------|---------------------------------------|---|---|---|--------------|
| 7            | Of the duration of this sect          | - | - | - | 513          |
| 8            | What parts of scripture they received | - | - | - | ib.          |
| 9            | Explanation of a prayer of Elxai      | - | - | - | 514          |

C H A P T E R XXIII.

OF THE ALOGIANS.

|   |                                                                                                |   |   |   |     |
|---|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---|---|---|-----|
| 1 | The account of them by Epiphanius and Philaster, as rejecting John's gospel and the Revelation | - | - | - | 515 |
| 2 | There never was any such Herefy                                                                | - | - | - | 516 |
| 3 | Some account of Epiphanius's article of the Alogians                                           | - | - | - | ib. |
| 4 | This Herefy was probably invented, upon the occasion of the controversy with the Millenarians  | - | - | - | 517 |
| 5 | A groundless opinion among the moderns concerning the Unitarians of the second century         | - | - | - | 518 |

E R R A T A.

| Page. line. |        | read. | Page. col. line. | for | read                    |
|--------------------|--------|--------------|-------------------------|------------|--------------------------------|
| 50                 | 3 b.   | for 595      | 274                     | 1 6        | Tab. Fab.                      |
| 487                | 6 b.   | hat that     | 311                     | 1 1        | κυριων κυριον                  |
| IN THE NOTES.      |        |              |                         |            |                                |
| 14                 | 1 1 b. | too          | 331                     | 2 4        | αλωναι αλωναι                  |
| 37                 | 1 6 b. | criptura     | 351                     | 1 18       | αλων αλων                      |
| 154                | 1 3    | crebo        | 353                     | 2 11       | υιοι υιοι                      |
| 231                | 1 2    | perjugez     | 361                     | 2 12       | δητε ησκει δητε ησκει          |
| 248                | 1 2 b. | τθτε         | 374                     | 1 2        | ισχυροτερα ισχυροτερα          |
|                    |        |              | 431                     | 1 4        | νιρι νιρι                      |
|                    |        |              | 459                     | 1 4 b.     | dele point at end of the line. |